Diocese Embroiled in Molestation Scandal

By Wendy Chisholm, OT reporter

The Catholic diocese in the Central Florida area, long seen as a bastion of decency and forthrightness, is facing serious charges that repudiate such a reputation.

The scandal broke on September 28th, when charges of child molestation were brought by the Orlando Police Department against Father Raymond Sismarino. He was originally charged with one case of sexual abuse of a pre-teen boy, but, after the story broke, several other victims have come forward to verify the depredations of Sismarino.

The abuse apparently started over 10 years ago, as told by Reggie Macnamara, a 24 year old production manager who told police he was abused over a six month period when he was 14. Macnamara was reluctant to come forward before now, but said he felt he had to when he discovered other incidents of abuse.

Three other victims have talked to police, and additional charges are being brought against Sismarino. The Catholic Church has suspended Sismarino from his duties but have offered no other comment on the allegations. Details on these other victims have not been released due to the age of the victims, but the OPD has vowed that Sismarino will pay for his crimes. Any other victims are encouraged to contact either the OPD or Crime-Line.

NIOT Protesters Traveling a Dark Road

By Charles Quaker, OT reporter

Where once, the Not in Our Town name was lauded and praised, that time has passed on. The raison d'être of the group, peaceful protest and standing up for the little man, has turned dark and violent. Where peace once reigned, the NIOT protesters now embrace violence and extremist rhetoric.

“In the beginning,” said Mikey Callister, a local shop owner and former supporter, “The Not In Our Town group stood for something I could believe in. Now? They’re just bullies who espouse reprehensible values, intimidation and violence. I can no longer support such an organization.”

Mr. Callister’s allegations are not unfounded. Police reports indicate that many members of the Not In Our Town movement have been arrested for petty theft and assault. In holding with this change in perspective, the group’s literature, once calling for a reduction in physical confrontations, now encourage such behavior.

The targets of their attacks have also changed, transforming from those they used to target to those they used to protect. Additionally, their rhetoric has now targeted minorities, homosexuals and women. It is unclear where this change in tenor in the group has come from, as many former members will not speak about the issue. Many in the law enforcement community believe coercion is a large reason for the silence.

“The dream is dead,” said Detective Harmony Croseth of the Orlando Police Department. “What began as an uplifting movement has been transformed into just another hate group. We advise people to steer clear of those wearing NIOT gear, for any good will they used to have has now evaporated.”

If anyone has information on the activities of NIOT, they are encouraged to contact either the police or the Crime Line.

UNSAVORY LINK FOUND BETWEEN CATHOLIC CHURCH AND NOT IN OUR TOWN

By Wendy Chisholm, OT reporter

As if the child molestation charges were not enough for the Catholic Church, links have been found between several members of the clergy in the Orlando diocese and the extremist group Not In Our Town.

Two members of the Catholic Church clergy, Father Francis McCullough and Father Stephen Linelli, have been spotted at several Not In Our Town protests, and Father McCullough recently defended the organization.

“The work Not In Our Town does in the Orlando area is special, and should be encouraged. Their aim is to protect businesses and locals from those who would do them harm. How could we not support such a group?” said Father McCullough.

While such statements certainly held true when NIOT first burst upon the scene, the same cannot be said today. Ironically, Father McCullough’s statement was made just yesterday. When asked about the group’s current dark reputation, the priest deflected the question and simply restated his statement again.

The connection does not seem to be a unanimous one. “The recent activities of Not In Our Town certainly do not reflect the values and beliefs of the Catholic Church. The Diocese is looking into these allegations and will act accordingly,” said one Catholic priest, who asked to remain anonymous.

It is unclear if there is an alliance between the Church and NIOT, but the thought that they may be involved together is certainly a troubling one.

SUCCESS AT CLEANUP

The average cost of rehabilitating a seal after the Exxon Valdez oil spill in Alaska was $80,000. At a special ceremony, two of the most expensively saved animals were released back into the wild amid cheers and applause from onlookers. A minute later, in full view, they were both eaten by a killer whale.

INFECTED BLOOD REPORTS BASED ON COMPROMISED SAMPLES

By Larry Sumter, OT Reporter

Recent reports of infected or tainted blood in the Central Florida area have been greatly exaggerated, according to the Florida Department of Health.

“While the reports of tainted blood had many people’s feathers ruffled,” said Dr. Phillip Masgrove, a spokesperson for the Florida Department of Health, “the truth is the blood supplies in Central Florida are perfectly fine. Medical officers are working diligently to insure the blood being offered in all of our facilities is free of any infection.”

The problem, medical experts say, came about because the samples used to in those previous tests were compromised. The seals were discovered to have been broken when the Department of Health began its investigation. As such, the tainted blood could have been purposefully tainted or the samples compromised through an innocent act.

Investigations into what exactly happened are still ongoing. Procedures for the handling of blood samples are also being reviewed in an effort to prevent similar problems in the future. “The fact that these reports were allowed to burgeon due to incorrect handling is worrisome,” said Dr. Masgrove, “but we’re confident the issue will be resolved to everyone’s satisfaction.”

The bottom line is there are no tainted blood issues in Central Florida.

MURDER VICTIM BODIES DISAPPEARANCE A SCAM RATHER THAN A MYSTERY

by
Buff Spikey

The puzzling quandary of disappearing murder victims in the Orlando Police Department had officials scratching their heads, but the quandary seems to have found a solution.

The report, originally published in the Orlando Tribune, expressed incredulity at the missing bodies and wondered at the source of the absent corpses. It has come to light that the misplaced cadavers were instrumental in a scam perpetrated by a third party body transportation company.

A growing industry, corpse transportation has little regulation in Florida. The result of this lack of regimentation is there is no oversight. It is this lack of oversight that led to issue with the missing bodies.

Skylar Body Transportation, or SBT, had a contract with the county morgue to transport corpses in numerous situations, including from crime scenes, nursing homes, and to and from funeral homes. While the oversight from institutions such as nursing homes and funeral homes was more rigid, the oversight from crime scenes was not as stringent.

SBT used this lack of supervision to pad their pockets. The company artificially padded their numbers in order to increase charges to the city. By reporting the body missing, or, in fact, the body actually going “missing,” the company reported delivering two bodies when, in fact, only one was actually delivered.

The Orlando Police Department is looking into SBT and charges are being considered.

DEPARTING EMPLOYEE, NOT IMPORTANT ENOUGH FOR SEND OFF

ATLANTA—Noting the distinct lack of fanfare surrounding his departure last Friday, employees at Empire Marketing Solutions concluded that sales associate Brent Wheeler was not quite important enough to warrant a formal send-off on his last day of work. “A few weeks ago there was a whole big gathering for Paul with cupcakes and everything, but for Brent, there was just this one-sentence mention in our weekly update email from our office manager that was mostly about the break room refrigerator policy,” said coworker Dana Oppenheim, adding that a couple people who happened to see Wheeler heading for the door at the end of the day did take a moment to wish him well. “So that’s it, I guess. He’s gone now.” Oppenheim added, however, that Wheeler’s unheralded exit made sense given that in five years at the company he had never become important enough for coworkers to acknowledge his birthday

WEAPON PURCHASES CONTINUE TO SKYROCKET

By Levi Wanderer, OT Reporter

Much ado has been made of the hysteria surrounding recent reports of skyrocketing weapon purchases. These reports are, as it turns out, unfounded.

While there has, indeed, been an increase in weapon purchases, these purchases were perfectly legal and above board. The magnitude of the caliber of weapons makes sense when considering the consumer - the U.S. Military.

The Central Florida area is home to several military bases, and, in keeping with increasing security protocols, an armory has been established in the area.

“With the amount of U.S. servicemen employed in the Central Florida area, terrorist attacks are a very real possibility,” said Air Force Brigadier General Rupert Pynchon. “In order to protect both our brave servicemen and the civilian population, an armory has been established to that we

RIPPER KILLER STRIKES A SECOND TIME

By C. Ron Kite

The local police's worst nightmare has proven true - a copycat killer is loose in Central Florida. But this copycat is taking his cue from one of the most notorious serial killers of all time - Jack the Ripper.

The second victim is Annie Merchant, a 45 year old secretary from Winter Garden. Merchant, listed at 5'4" with blue eyes and wavy brown hair, was found along Scarlet Rd leading to Ward Park. The body was found in a remote area, with the time of death projected to be about 4 days ago.

The body bore wounds almost exactly matching those of Annie Chapman, Jack the Ripper's confirmed second victim. Merchant's throat was cut in a similar fashion to Chapman's, though the main difference between the two victims were evidenced here. While Chapman's throat bore jagged cut marks, Merchant's incision was much more deft and practiced, indicating a practiced technique.

Additionally, the most notable Chapman wound, the removal of the womb, was replicated on Merchant's body. Besides the wounds, there are other similarities between Merchant and Chapman. Both women were 45, both had wavy brown hair and blue eyes. Whether these similarities were purposeful or not is unknown, but, considering the other analogous details, it cannot be discounted.

There was one detail that did NOT match the earlier killing. A handwritten note was left at the scene, having been composed using an archaic pen and ink set up. The contents of the note read "Better with age! Fond memory - Dr. T (indiscernible squiggle)" Authorities are unsure as to what, exactly, this note means, but every resource is being bent to unraveling this anomaly.

The Orlando Police Department has every available resource dedicated to this case, and a spokesman has not ruled out contacting the FBI for assistance. Anyone knowing anything about the case is urged to contact either the OPD or the Crime Line.
